“ I knew Grey only a bit, by way of my wife. But I can say he had a charisma and a caring; I wish I had been able to know him better and longer because he was clearly a distinguished soul; a true human with a heart of love and caring.

“ Greg was an amazing big brother, always patient and kind. He would let me sit on his lap and read to him even when he had friends waiting for him. I always felt that we had a special connection in the midst of such a large and diverse family. He was a peaceful person who always looked out for us, always telling us to be careful when parting.

He was welcomed into the McFarland home by both his sister Brenda and her husband Mike often, where he grew close to the whole family, offering advice and love to all her children.

He also was particularly close with Matt Hale, Bobi's husband. They were both car guys and the spent countless hours talking about and working on cars.

In his last years he shared a home with his sister Karin. They took care of each other and would occasionally butt heads, as only siblings can do. In the end they always got back to caring for each other, all hard feelings forgotten. As I said, he was an amazing big brother. He will be in our hearts always.

Greg was an outstanding mechanic and body man. My father and him were in business together in the 80s. They bought wrecked cars and refurbished them for resale. My father could always count on Greg to get the job done.
